Great American Smokeout Day

The Great American Smokeout Day is this Thursday, November 17th. The goal of this special day is quite obvious: to get people to quit smoking, resulting in fewer health problems, and less cancer and emphysema deaths resulting from smoking and secondary smoke.

The American Cancer Society created this day back in 1977. Hopefully, someday, this special day will no longer be needed.

Running on empty...

A couple of weeks ago I was running a business, running for Governor, and running over to Richmond for an interview with Rachel at one of our local newspapers, the Palladium-Item. In the midst of all of that, I could swear that I was also run over by a large truck. As it turns out, what actually ran over me was a stroke, but thanks to some quick action by Rachel, the Richmond Fire Department, Reid Hospital and countless others, I am well on my way to running as well as I ever did, which may or may not have been as well as I hoped, or even as well as I remember.

The business I run is a contracting company, and we were just finishing up one job and getting ready to start on another. Thanks to my brother Ross, who has been with me for 42 years, and some understanding customers who are also our friends, it looks like continuing to run the business may come off without a hitch.

I spent election day and week flat on my back in a hospital bed in Indianapolis. It's the first time in 9 elections that I wasn't standing at the polls asking for votes all day. And while I would have preferred to spend the day at the polls, it turns out the results were about the same wherever I spent the day. Much as I suspected, I didn't win the election, just as most Libertarian candidates on the ballot didn't win the election.

Libertarians are running on a platform that most people don't want to deal with. We advocate for a constitutionally limited government. I attended a lot of forums and meetings

Libertarian Perspective

by Rex Bell

in my campaign for governor, and I found most people who want limited government only want to limit it ways that benefit them. The general consensus seems to be "it's only pork if someone else is getting it." Believe me, I understand how seductive that line of reasoning can be when it goes up against the personal responsibility that is necessary for a limited government to succeed.

Libertarians run for office because every election, more and more people understand why we run. Over 86,000 voters cast their ballot for me this year, and over 4 million voters gave Libertarian presidential candidate Gary Johnson the nod. Some because they value personal freedom and responsibility over the stifling nanny state, and some because they recognize the unsustainability of a system where more people want to ride the wagon than want to pull it, and the fallacy of a government that rewards sloth and punishes initiative.

At one of the forums I attended, a sitting member of the U.S. House of Representatives expressed his concern that people were being released from prison, and were then being forced to wait up to 4 weeks before they started receiving their government checks again. He promised to do something about it.

I hope you will promise to do something about it also.

I know I have. Thank you all for your prayers and support.

I'll see you when I'm up and running again.
